

ANNUAL REPORT 2006

“If you keep your head and thumbs up even small-scale actions can help to influence major issues – and this kind of campaigning is also fun!”

Hitching a ride to combat poverty

Organisations and individual activists are busily campaigning for Finland to adopt more favourable development policies through the new Globbarit network. During its first year the network has involved 30 organisations and 650 citizens.

The new network organised its first publicity stunt in July when Heidi Kilpeläinen, a student from the University of Joensuu, came up with the idea of hitch-hiking around Finland to publicise the importance of eradicating global poverty.

“Coming from a small village in Eastern Finland, it’s bothered me that it’s often been impossible to participate in this kind of campaign, and the idea of turning thumbing a lift into a campaign in itself started as a kind of joke,” says Kilpeläinen.

Kilpeläinen and her fellow student Suvi Järvinen thumbed right across Eastern Finland asking the people they met along the way to fill out ‘Greetings from somewhere in Finland’ postcards, which were then presented to parliamentarians in May 2007 at a mass lobbying event in Helsinki.

The messages on the cards urged politicians to ensure that Finland acts more effectively to change the global structures that cause and maintain poverty. The campaign attracted plenty of attention in local media.

2006 – A year of strategic thinking for KEPA

*“KePa brings
NGOs’ voice into political decision-making.”*

The focus at KEPA during 2006 has very much been on planning and strategic thinking. The work of organisations like KEPA is largely shaped by our member organisations’ needs and rapid changes in our operating environment, and we must always be ready to react. At KEPA we’re striving to respond to such challenges by clearly setting out the ways we must work.

All this thinking has been productive. During 2006 we have drawn up strategies for our most important functions. Key themes behind these strategies include the vital needs of our smaller member organisations, fair trade policies, development financing, and impacts on rural communities in developing countries.

KEPA’s main activities have gone on as usual in spite of the extra emphasis on planning for the future. Our expanding training services are proving to be increasingly popular. KEPA’s work in developing countries has continued in collaboration with our local partner organisations. In the autumn our lobbying efforts already began to focus on the March 2007 parliamentary elections with the planning of a major campaign together with member organisations.

KEPA and its member organisations always try to keep pressure on national governments to fulfil their high-minded promises to support poor countries. The year 2006 should have been a year of action around the world – after the previous year’s massive and widely publicised conferences and concerts. But new concrete actions have unfortunately not materialised. The international NGO Social Watch estimated that the overall increase in global aid levels would have been 120 million dollars higher if all promises had been kept. This sum roughly corresponds to the amount spent on wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The links between development and security have become even more prominent. But at the same time there is a risk that development goals could become subordinate to western countries’ foreign and security policies. While holding the EU Presidency in the second half of 2006, Finland promoted the coherence of development policies, with the idea being to ensure that other policies do not conflict with the aims of development policies. But at the same time the government did not make any coherent progress towards the goal included in its own programme of raising the level of official development aid to reach 0.7 per cent of gross national income by 2010.

After the elections of March 2007 it seems that the new government has shelved this target indefinitely. Of course the steady increases in aid levels in absolute financial terms achieved during the previous government and planned by the new government are positive trends in themselves. But without a fixed deadline Finland now seems to have withdrawn from its political commitment. Responsibility for raising aid levels is again to be passed on to the following government.

Negotiations conducted with the Ministry for Foreign Affairs in 2006 have clarified KEPA’s role in terms of both our influence in shaping development policies, and our work in Africa, Latin America and Indonesia.

Important factors lie behind the difficult decisions made at our autumn meeting to close KEPA’s field office in Zambia, and raise our membership fees. KEPA is an innovative organisation prepared to launch brave new initiatives. The opening up of our new activities in Asia should help us and all of our 273 member organisations to gain a better understanding of the forces and mechanisms that result in and maintain poverty. The massive voting majority in favour of increased membership fees shows how much our members value KEPA and the services we provide for them.

WORLD VILLAGE -FESTIVAL 2006

Seventh World Village -festival was arranged at Kaisaniemi Park, Railwaystation square and at the International Cultural Centre CAISA at 27.-28. May 2006.

Artists from four continents performed music and art.

There were approximately 60 000 visitors and around hundred performances.

In year 2006 the main focus was voluntary-work, which is important to organize such big event as World Village -festival.

The best festival in town

The World Village festival was earlier organised every second year, alternating with the Market of Possibilities events. Since 2005 the markets have become a vital part of the annual World Village festivals held at the end of May.

Visitor numbers have remained stable since 2005 at an estimated 60,000 people over the whole weekend. The 2006 event was set up with the help of a record number of 150 volunteers. Practical arrangements ran so smoothly that Helsinki City Council proclaimed the World Village as the city's cleanest festival.

Guests of honour included Dr Vandana Shiva, a leading figure from the global solidarity movement, as well as Finland's Minister for Foreign Trade and Development Paula Lehtomäki. The event's more than 250 exhibitors included well known companies as well as many NGOs. Presentations covered issues including voluntary work, development cooperation, child sponsorship and

Markets of Possibilities linked across Finland

Fairs known as Markets of Possibilities are held regularly in an increasing number of towns and cities across Finland to enable NGOs to publicise their work. These free public events have been organised for more than twenty years, and they are as varied as the towns where they are held.

The numbers of visitors and participating NGOs have recently grown rapidly. Markets were held in 2006 in 19 locations from Rovaniemi in Lapland to Mariehamn in the Åland Islands. The markets featured more prominently than ever in local media, and attracted a total of around 20,000 visitors and more than 450 NGOs.

During 2006, market organisers set up a new network with its own coordinating group. This network will facilitate the exchange of ideas and experiences and promote practical collaboration between different organisers. KEPA provides supporting and training for event organisers. The website for the Markets of Possibilities has been redesigned to support the new network and create a new image.

With the help of an EU-funded project "Market of Possibilities Goes Global" the Latvian capital Riga has been added to the network, which already includes seven Finnish towns. The project was launched in January, and is being coordinated by KEPA.

global trade, with a special focus on Asia in line with the Foreign Ministry's theme for 2006.

Performers from five continents gave about 140 shows on four stages. Highlights included the French-Algerian-Iranian fusion artists Mad Sheer Khan, a combined performance by Trio Töykeät and Vietnamese jazz saxophonist Dac Thien Quy, and Spanish musicians La Kinky Beat. 🎵

Pressure on politicians

According to the programme of Finland's previous government, Finnish official development aid should have been raised progressively to reach the UN target level of 0.7 per cent of gross national income (GNI) by 2010. But in 2006 aid as a proportion of GNI actually fell, to just 0.39 per cent.

Last year KEPA's campaign for the 0.7 per cent target culminated in a publicity stunt where a full-sized cardboard replica of Finance Minister Eero Heinäluoma was presented with a petition from NGOs calling for rises in aid levels – after the real minister had refused an invitation to accept the petition. The cardboard cutout minister featured prominently in the Finnish media.

During the Finnish EU Presidency in the second half of 2006, Finland promoted coherence in development policies. KEPA's lobbying efforts contributed to the Finnish Presidency's organisation of a unique top-level EU meeting for trade and development ministers which stressed the close linkages between trade and poverty.

KEPA also successfully spotlighted issues related to the Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs) between the EU and 75 African, Caribbean and Pacific States. The EPAs have been a source of concern for NGOs, since they often force producers from countries with radically different circumstances to compete on the same basis.

During the autumn the Globbarit network sent hundreds of internet postcards to politicians calling for the Finnish parliamentary delegation to the World Trade Organisation to address challenges related to the EPA agreements. Feedback from MPs was largely positive. 📌

FOCUS ON IMPOVERISHMENT

The term impoverishment encompasses all the socio-economic processes that lead to poverty. Poverty is not a natural phenomenon, but a man-made situation. People are impoverished by international and local structures, which can also stop them escaping from poverty. Economically powerful international actors could greatly facilitate the eradication of impoverishment. Developing countries' debts could be forgiven, and unjust trade mechanisms could be rectified. All of us form a part of such structures, however, and we can also all do our bit to change them, through our choices as consumers and voters.

KEPA'S LOBBYING IN NICARAGUA

KEPA and local Nicaraguan partners help to get the voices of grassroots actors heard in decision-making related to natural resources and other issues. Participants in training held last year at KEPA's office included 15 employees of the URACCAN University for autonomous regions on Nicaragua's Atlantic coast, who are aiming to set up their own programme of training in social action as part of the official curriculum. KEPA has also supported the region's poverty reduction strategy.

TRAINING AND ADVICE IN MOZAMBIQUE

KEPA actively participates in Mozambique's food security network ROSA, providing training on development policy issues and serving as the network's regional contact organisation in the province of Cabo Delgado, where KEPA also provides tailored advisory services for the local small-scale farmers' association.

Education across continents

KEPA provides a wide range of training in Finland and the South. Most trainees are representatives of KEPA's member organisations and partner organisations. During 2006 a total of 72 courses were organised, attracting 1,398 participants. Half of these courses were held in Finland, with 627 participants in all. In Finland most trainees were women, while men were in the majority on courses run in developing countries.

Part of KEPA's training is conducted via the internet. Participants have greatly appreciated the consequent opportunities to interact with people in different parts of the world.

Advice on project management was provided for about a hundred NGOs as well as many other clients. Special events related to project work were organised in May 2006, including web-based advisory services. Approximately 20 NGOs took advantage of these special services.

A series of courses named The Global Machine, organised in spring 2006, examined the causal links between different levels of economic activity by spotlighting the impacts of various international actors on development co-operation. In the autumn a series of courses entitled Limiting Poverty was held in collaboration with member organisations, attracting considerable positive feedback.

A new form of training known as Learning Paths has also been tested. These combined advisory and training services are tailored to meet the specific needs of single organisations.

During 2006 KEPA also assisted member organisations with marketing campaigns and by providing facilities for NGOs' own training programmes.

www.kepa.fi/koulutus

Courses held in the South particularly focused on themes related to food production and natural resources. In Zambia 18 training events were organised during 2006, attracting 334 participants, about 40 per cent of whom were women.

ASSISTANCE FOR PROJECTS IN TANZANIA

KEPA's training and project advice in Tanzania have helped to improve the quality of the project planning carried out by Finnish NGOs and their local partners. There is also plenty of demand for training on project administration, and some would-be participants could not be accommodated in courses held during 2006. Course topics have included indicators of partnership, the integration of equality issues, and financial administration.

Opportunities for voluntary work in the South

KEPA's Southern Volunteer Programme (ETVO) enables volunteers to work on grassroots projects in developing countries with local NGOs. This programme has been coordinated by KEPA for ten years. A new strategy launched during 2006 aims to integrate ETVO more closely with KEPA's other work promoting member organisations' projects and partnerships in the South.

ETVO volunteers work for the southern partners of KEPA member organisations for periods of 6–12 months. One advantage of this programme is that the practical experiences of returned volunteers can greatly benefit Finnish NGOs. Twelve volunteers have been chosen for a pilot group for the new strategy. The volunteers will work on projects in Tanzania, Zambia, Cambodia, India and Peru, run by the Finnish NGOs Sports Development Aid, the Finnish National Students Union, Children of Cambodia, Pääskyt, Interperdia, The Feminist Association Unioni and KEPA. ♣

EXCHANGE PROGRAMMES BETWEEN ZAMBIA AND MOZAMBIQUE

KEPA's field offices launched a new exchange programme for the employees of various NGOs in 2006. The programme aims to improve the exchange of information on issues such as sustainable agriculture and other aspects of land use.

The first group was sent from Zambia to work with the National Peasants Union of Mozambique (UNAC) who subsequently posted members to work in Zambia with the Green Living Movement and the Farmer Organisation Support Programme.

A similar exchange of personnel was arranged between the Mozambique Debt Group (GDM) and Zambia's Jesuit Centre for Theological Reflection, to share information related to the national debts of the two countries.

Mozambique / NIINA PITKÄNEN

Effective publicity

KEPA's website received more than 60,000 visits in both November and December. The numbers of hits on the main part of the site have been rising steadily. More than 90 per cent of respondents to a survey of site-users were satisfied with the website's content. More than 60 per cent said that the information they obtained from the site encouraged them to make practical changes in their lives, such as buying fair trade goods or participating in voluntary work. KEPA's own news service was highly productive, generating 366 news items over the year – 83 per cent more than planned.

Readers of KEPA's magazine Kumppani were also very satisfied. Some 97 per cent of respondents to a reader survey run in the spring were positive about the magazine. Readers most appreciated stories on environmental issues, human rights and local cultures.

KEPA's publicity work is increasingly using electronic media, and a new extranet service was launched for member organisations in March 2006. This carefully planned new service aims to streamline the flow of information to KEPA's members. Almost half of all of KEPA's member organisations had registered to use the site by the end of the year. The new extranet service has replaced the earlier Kirahviposti newsletter, whose last issue was circulated in August 2006.

The November 2006 issue of KEPA's annual English-language Newsletter focused on rural livelihoods. The Newsletter is especially designed for KEPA's foreign partners and partner organisations in the South.

Changes ahead for KEPA in Asia

KEPA has so far not run a field office in Asia, but instead employed a liaison officer based on the premises of the Indonesian organisation INSIST (the Indonesian Society for Social Transformation). This post of liaison officer will not be continued. The results of an external assessment of the organisational model of a single employee are now to be used in the planning of KEPA's future operations in Asia, where KEPA supports both INSIST and the Thai Foundation for Ecological Recovery (FER).

Embezzlement case leads to tougher accounting

KEPA's accounting procedures were radically tightened up during 2006 following the revelation in spring that funds amounting to some 80,000 euros had been embezzled from KEPA's finances in Zambia. Details of the crime were announced on 10.4.2006.

New guidelines were promptly drawn up to cover KEPA's financial procedures. The accounts of offices and other administrative units will now be scrutinised annually. KEPA's professional financial specialists will visit each office at least once a year, and field office coordinators will also be trained in financial administration.

As an umbrella organisation, KEPA must also pass on the lessons learnt to member organisations. KEPA annually organises courses on budgetting, reporting and good administrative practices both in Finland and in the South. By addressing such cases as the recent Zambian embezzlement KEPA aims to improve transparency and help everyone learn from such mistakes. 📌

KePa is supported by development cooperation funds
granted by the Finnish Ministry for Foreign Affairs

KEPA, the Finnish Service Centre for Development Cooperation, is an umbrella organisation for Finnish NGOs. KEPA's role includes representing and providing services for member organisations, as well as other work lobbying and campaigning for global justice. KEPA also builds vital networks and provides a forum for NGOs and activists. During 2006 KEPA maintained four field offices and a liaison officer in Zambia, Mozambique, Tanzania, Nicaragua and Indonesia.
