Introduction

There are not enough up to date websites or platforms in Tanzania to provide clear and trustworthy information about civil rights and health services for youth.

- By using tienoo.fi website model created by All Our Children
 - we create tienoo.co.tz website
- 25 students from 2 universities involved in developing the project, about 1000 students were introduced to the website so far.

Health Services at Kigamboni that are youth friendly and that provide services for the youth

Health Services in Tanzania

There is a gender desk in the Kigamboni police station. If you are a Mwalimu Nyerere student or a Kigamboni resident, you can report various gender based violence cases at the station.

LESSONS LEARNED:

- What is relevant to us, may not be relevant to our target group. They know what is relevant to them.
- The process of gathering information to the website has been as valuable as the end product meaning the website itself.

Safe places for students to do field work and volunteer.

Challenges and modifications during implementation

Collection of reliable and friendly data in Tanzania is very tricky.

While the Tienoo website in Finland is just mainly bringing together different materials from other sites to one site, the Tienoo in Tanzania is a much more complicated project, we have had to:

- 1) gather information that is not readily available
- 2) ensure the information is relevant and reliable

If not working with a clinic/approved health service, we cannot access and distribute the health info we want to have on the website.

Finding the right partners takes time as well as negotiating the partnership

Working at a distance from one another is challenging.

Principles for Digital Development

1. By Re-using and improving an already created digital tool, we take the work forward and the collaborative result is greater than what one organization alone could achieve.
2. We share tools and strategies collaboratively and thus increase efficiency and impact.
3. We practice open approach to digital development which increases the collaboration in the digital development community.
